Description

Upper body of a male figure from the shoulder of a Nolan neck-amphora. Preserved are the head, shoulders, and upper chest of a bearded man, head in profile to left, upper chest in three-quarter view. On his head he wears a purple apiculate fillet with raised tip in front. His curly hair protrudes from the forehead and before the ear and is rolled up at the neck. The figure has a profile eye, straight nose, and short neck. He wears a mantle draped over the left shoulder and chest, with folds stacked at the neck. The mantle is arranged in parallel folds except for the edge, which forms a loose zig-zag.
